Since a very young age I have developed a fascination over structures. Structures usually combine both functional and aesthetic qualities: the structure of words makes poetry; the structure of strokes and colours makes painting; the structure of notes makes music; and the structure of multiple media and materials ultimately forms the fundamentals of architecture.

Having enthusiasm for both art and science, I was once in a quandary regarding which path I should take. After my visit to the Sagrada Familia, I know architecture is the answer to the question. Artists mainly aim at accomplishing beauty, even that of the surreal; scientists are more inclined to think and act with a rational methodology. If anything can merge seamlessly the distinct yet complementary virtues of art and science, it has to be architecture, which also satisfies my life-long ambition to create.

Over the years I have had the privilege to visit different places around the world, including China, Japan, the United States and major European cities, all showcasing invaluable treasures in the world of architecture. Visits to these world-class museums and exhibitions and, perhaps simply the exposure to the aura of the dwelling of nature have stimulated my senses and inspired me a lot. While admiring many titans in the field of architecture, I pay most respect to Antoni Gaudi, especially after my visit to the Sagrada Familia. The mesmerising spiritual heights, elaborate details, and the way the temple echoes with its natural surroundings, left me speechless. 'Originality is returning to the origin.' Getting back home from stately monuments and every time coming by Norman Foster's airport in Hong Kong, I realised that I also have architect's dream within my own soul.

I have been studying visionary art in a private art studio called New Issue Art Group for almost 9 years, from time to time entering drawing competitions that I held interest in. In 2006, I took part in a winter programme, Creative Digital Art Classroom, held by the Chinese University of Hong Kong for talented and gifted students, which equipped me with basic knowledge about computer-aided design. On top of that, I also joined the 2013 Career Discovery in Architecture, a three-week summer course conducted by the University of Hong Kong. The all-embracing course comprising lectures, workshops, field visits and intensive design studio, painted me a comprehensive picture of how studying architecture is like. The valuable experience further confirmed my aspiration for the discipline. In the first of the two design studio projects, I managed to design a 1:20 model fitting in a one-cargo volume, predicated upon the concept of a 'change of space', with respect to size, brightness and concavity of space. While perhaps not worthy to be bragged as a huge accomplishment, the project does help me realise the actual process, value and fulfilment of designing.

If I could be offered the chance to display my zeal and flair for architecture, I would certainly seize it with the highest regard and honour to the profession.
